Top 5 FAQ's for Babies at 4 Weeks of Age:

1 How often should we do tummy time?

Shoot for at least 3-4 sessions of tummy time a day, lasting about 5-10 minutes each.

Do tummy time even when the baby seems fussy.

- If they are going to be fussy, they might as well meet a developmental milestone while they are at it!
- Frustration is a great motivator (in realistic increments).

2 When will my baby sleep for longer stretches?

If they aren't quite there, double-check your swaddle, be sure it is right and tight, tight, tight!

- MOC has developed a specially designed swaddle blanket and method to help you get swaddling just right!
- You've got this!

3 How long should feedings be?

Feedings should last no longer than 30 minutes.

- View the Moms on Call Feeding Guideline for a general guide of amounts by age.

Breastfeeding: You may notice a decrease in feeding time as the baby gets older.

- This does not mean supply is down; the baby is just becoming more efficient.

Bottle Feeding: Make sure to increase the amount by ½ ounce if the baby is sucking a bottle dry for two feedings in a row.

Babies need 24-32 oz a day until 1 year of age.

Top 5 FAQ's for Babies at 4 Weeks of Age:

4 How far can my 4 week old baby see?

Fun Fact: Newborn vision is equivalent to the large E on the eye chart

5 What can I do with the extra time my baby is awake during the day?

At this age, we notice more awake time.

Here's an idea for how you can break up their awake time:

- 5-10 minutes of tummy time
- 5-10 minutes on the activity mat
- 5-10 minutes of snuggling, loving, reading, singing, etc.
